Dear Charlie

The Weekend in Aspen last year was really a great stimulating,even inspiring event. Make no mistakes. It is YOU who made the difference.

Thinking of this year, two thoughts came to my mind re core challenges which could probably be discussed.
1) the impact of a second industrial revolution emerging as a result of robotization of many human activities, much beyond manufacturing. With huge social and political consequences (not just economic ones) as significant fraction of our society (US and Israel included) will find themselves not just unemployed but rather unemployable.
2) the impact on Education (from kindergarten to University degree) of easy access to broadband internet and high level material from KhanAcademy likes and Ivy League best scholars (edu. , iTunesU, Coursera etc.). We quickly approach a situation where top quality education will be available to everyone who understands English and has basic Math skills.
No need for wealthy parents or a visa to the US. You could have it in an African village or Afghani slums. And at home many established institutions will face disruptive transformations.

Just some food for thought. If you will feel it worth checking those ideas for the Weekend I think that in regard to (1) Google people on one hand and someone like Mike Bloomberg on the other hand(I've had a fascinating conversation with him re this issue) could be possible interviewees.
As to (2), I think Salman Khan is perfect, together with someone who deals with the big picture of global education and it's economies and dynamics.

Charlie, thinking of last year's event I've noticed that I still couldn't get an access to the two brain series that you've made with Eric Kandel. I would appreciate it if you could ask Margot (CCd) to email me some instructions re how can I get it.

Thx for the invitation
Looking forward
Best
Ehud Barak
